A few years ago, I had an opportunity to go on a pilgrimage with a friend to the Cathedral of St James in Santiago Spain. This was a special pilgrimage to me because it involved a lot of hiking and a lot of new sites that I was very unfamiliar with. I had researched it for several months prior to and at the same time started training by walking longer distances. After working many of the details out, my friend and I would walk about 20-25 km a day which averaged about 12-15 miles a day. This was an exciting time to think that after all the hard work and the preparations we were doing this. The thing that I had to come to terms with was that for 12 days we only would be walking with what we had in our backpacks. I learned this was both a blessing and a curse. Knowing that I wanted to be prepared, I tried to pack a lot in. Trying to keep the weight to a minimum I knew that I would only be able to carry so many non-essential items. After packing and repacking many times I finally got the weight to where I needed to be. Like our Gospel today, the disciples were sent out with even less. They were not allowed to carry a pack, or food, or even extra clothes. Still there is a feeling of freedom knowing that you make do with the small things that you have and use them to their full potential. We are called to look at our own lives this and see where we could cut down on the non-essential items so that we can focus on the task at hand and allow God to work in the moment. Take some time this week and ask yourself, how can I use my ordinary experiences to better serve God. How can you be sent into the world as the disciples were sent in our Gospel today?

God Bless,
 Fr Matt Rawson
